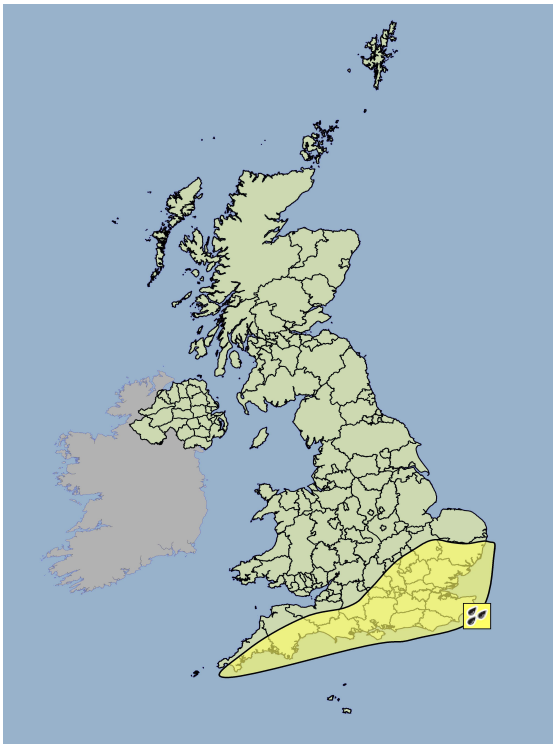
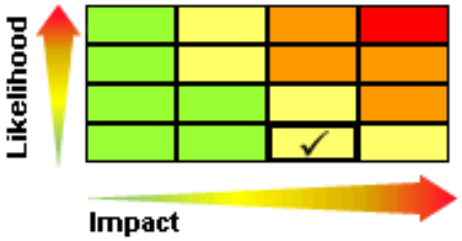
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The humid, unstable airmass across southern Britain will remain in place through Saturday. Scattered heavy showers and thunderstorms are therefore likely to continue to affect some areas. Many places will miss these storms, but where they do occur we are likely to see up to 30 mm rainfall in a short space of time, whilst lightning and hail may be additional hazards. The main risk of thunderstorms will become confined to southern parts of the warning area from late afternoon.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 08:45 on Sat, 20th Sep 2014 until 21:00 on Sat, 20th Sep 2014

Further heavy showers and thunderstorms are likely to continue through Saturday and into Saturday evening, with the main risk becoming confined to southern parts of the warning area from late afternoon.

The public should be aware of the potential for isolated disruption due to surface water flooding and lightning strikes.

This is an update to the warning issued on Friday.
